

Emergency Medicine Faculty Job Details

The University of Oklahoma, School of Community Medicine, Department of Emergency Medicine and OU-Physicians – Tulsa is seeking faculty candidates. The School of Community Medicine is a regional campus of the University of Oklahoma, College of Medicine, in partnership with the University of Tulsa, that recently expanded its undergraduate medical education program to a full 4 year track. The physician practice offers a full range of internal medicine care in both inpatient and outpatient settings. Our outpatient setting provides care coordination as a Patient Center Medical Home and was the first in the area to receive National Committee Quality Assurance Patient Center Medical Home Tier Three recognition. You can read more about the School of Community Medicine at: <http://tulsa.ou.edu/socm/index.htm>.

We are currently looking for candidates for faculty position of all levels. We are a growing group with a full department status (see our website www.oudem.org), and seeking to enlarge the faculty as we increase clinical responsibilities. Faculty have the overall tasks of furthering the educational, clinical, and scholarly activities of the OUDEM residents, as well as students of the College of Medicine and School of Community Medicine.

Applicants must be Emergency Medicine residency trained, Board Certified/Eligible by the American Board of Emergency Medicine or the American Board of Osteopathic Emergency Medicine, and subspecialty as appropriate, and eligible for Oklahoma license.

Tulsa is situated on the Arkansas River at the foothills of the Ozark Mountains in northeast Oklahoma, a region of the state known as Green Country. Tulsa's cost of living is below the national average and features an abundance of affordable housing as well as a good selection of public and private primary education schools. The Tulsa metropolitan area is also a vibrant arts community with a ballet, opera, symphony orchestra and two world class art museums.
